This teacher can't

I AM a teacher with a Mas years of experience who c mended. I moved here from and a half ago. I wanted to t really did not think that I w getting a job. Last summer, jobs and had five very good not get a job.

Someone said that perha substitute so that the school me, which I did. I substitute had very positive experience received compliments on w doing. In fact, a department schools told me of a couple would be available for the 20 and recommended that I app was called for an interview, well, but, again, I did not get

I am assuming I can't get of the higher salary I would schools don't want to hire o know there is no way to prov to question it, no one would

So what do I do? I guess I I feel bad about that beca area and the people, but I wa obviously, cannot do it here.

KARL STOLLEIS : HOUSTON CHRONICLE

DETERIORATING: The Battleship Texas is berthed near the San Jacinto Monument.

Out of place

State should consider moving the Battleship Texas.

THE Battleship Texas needs expensive repair and a dry berth. Rather than carving a permanent dry dock out of the historic San Jacinto Battlefield, Texas Parks and Wildlife should consider moving the vessel to another location on Galveston Bay.

With low attendance and surrounded by refineries, the Battleship Texas can't support itself as other battleship memorials do. A better location could change all that.

The warship and the battlefield are paired in the minds of many Houstonians, but the two have nothing to do with each other. Confused schoolchildren ask their guides what role the 20th century ship played in Texas' 19th century victory over the Mexican army.

It would make no sense to place a B-52 on the Gettysburg Battlefield, and the Battleship Texas is just as out of place as a jet bomber would be.

At the end of the Battle of San Jacinto, Gen. Sam Houston ordered his men to stop killing Mexican soldiers. When they kept on he said, "Gentlemen, I admire your bravery, but I must deplore your manners."

Reasonable Texans can admire the honorable service of the Battleship Texas while deploring the damage it threatens to do to the battlefield.
